There is a class of people in this world, by no means small, whose prominent pecultarity is whining. They whine because they are poor; or, if sich, because they have no health to enjoy their riches; they whine because they have 'no luck.' others' prosperity exceeds theirs; whine because some friends have died and they are still living; they whine because they have aches and pains, and because they have aches and pains, and they have aches and pains because they whine, and they whine, no one can tell why. Now, we would like to say a word about these whining persons. First, stop whining—it is no use, this everlasting complaining, fretting, fault-finding and whining. Why, you are the most deluded set of creatures that ever lived. Do you know that it is a well settled principle of thy singleys and comsettled principle of physiology and com-mon sense, that these habits are more Moulton for flirting with her audiences. exhausting to nervous vitality than almost any other violation of physiological law?

Party going. When one has been doing the agreeable an evening long to a room full of well-dressed people, not one of whom would shed a tear or pause a half hour in life's busy round if he were to die to-morrow, one is very apt to go home with a sort of does-it-pay sensation. The handsome toilet has been made for these critical, unloving eyes. For them, flowers and smiles donned, and the better things of home sacrificed, perhaps. And all for what?—to pass three hours among splendid costumes, and bright lights, and fragrant exotics, and men and women fragrant exotics, and men and women handsome as having given their whole mind to it could make them; to be regarded with envy, or a commiseration just touched with scorn, according to whether one's appearance was or was not a success; never to talk five minutes with an able person before your hostess vants him to do duly elsewhere, and breaks in upon you; to eat indigestible salads, and to go home at last, tired, sleepy, and thoroughly discontented with all that one has and is. How if one expended half the pains on an evening at nome—put oneself into one's best dress home—put oneself into one's best dress and into one's best mood for the sake of those to whom one is really dear? Would maple tree, Miller Mollar Stole a dollar that be the wasting of one's sweetness on the desert air, which it seems generally to be considered? The pioneer Methodist. Peter Cartwright, untered many wise and odd and witty sayings. He was often much annoyed at one sister, more noisy than pious who would go off on a high key at every opportunity. At an animated classmeeting one day she broke out with, "If I had one more feather in the wing of my faith, I could fly away and be with the Saviour."

"Stick in the feather, O Lord! and let her go, "fervently responded Brother Cartwright.
